The Zoology Department successfully participated in the Trade Fair Day held on Wednesday, 7th February 2024, showcasing the creativity, talents, and entrepreneurial skills of our students through the preparation and sale of silkworm cocoon handicrafts.

The primary objective of our participation in the event was to provide students with a platform to exhibit their innovative ideas and to promote entrepreneurship skills. The focus on silkworm cocoon handicrafts aimed to highlight the practical applications of our studies and create awareness about the diverse aspects of Zoology.

Students spared effort in setting up stalls that creatively displayed a variety of silkworm cocoon handicrafts. The designed jewellery to decorative pieces, each stall showcased the versatility of cocoon-based products.

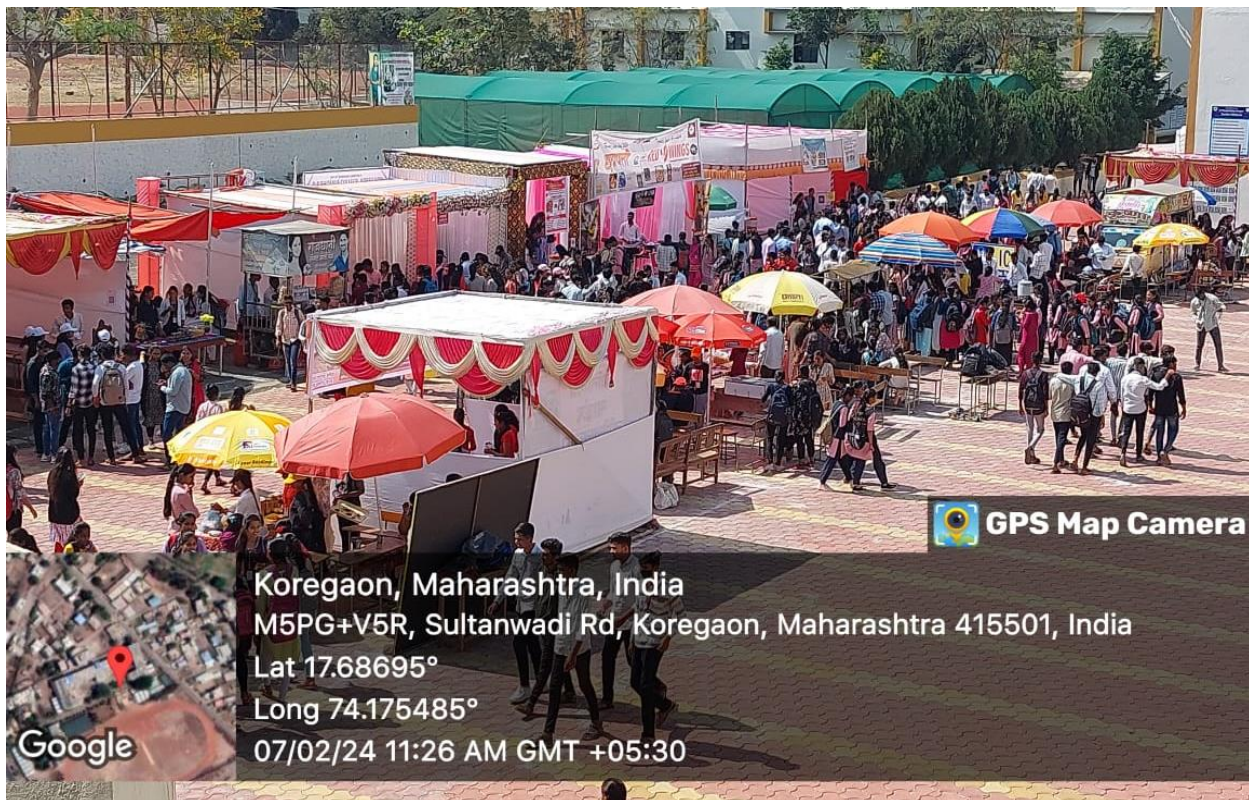

The stalls were not just about selling handicrafts; they were also designed to educate visitors about the life cycle of silkworms, the significance of cocoon in silk production, and the sustainable aspects of using silkworm resources in handicrafts. Through the entire process of preparing, marketing, and selling the handicrafts, students gained valuable entrepreneurial skills. Students learned about budgeting, pricing, effective communication, and customer engagement.
